

List of courses addressing Human Value Issues:

Course Code	Course Title	Course Plan
ECO22305DCE	Economics of Conflict, Peace and Development	To date, the study of conflicts has been dominated by political scientists, which prejudices the phenomenon as purely political. However, the use of economic theory and statistical evidence alongside the traditional case-studies can offer valuable analytical insights on the causes of inter- and intrastate conflicts and its effect on economic development. Students are introduced to models of conflict also.
ECO 22208DCE	Labour Economics	Labour economics is the study of how labour markets work. This course intends to focus on investigating numerous aspects of the labour market, including the supply of and demand for labour, labour-market equilibrium, human capital, employment and unemployment. It also deals with state – labour relations within the framework of labour unions and industrial relations.
ECO 22106DCE	Industrial Economics	it is to familiarize students with a broad range of methods and models applied by economists in the analysis of firms and industries.